

FIELD TRIP OPPORTUNITIES AND CURRICULUM OFFERINGS AT CHIEFTAINS MUSEUM/MAJOR RIDGE HOME

Major Ridge was born around 1771 in a village in the southeastern portion of present day Tennessee. In 1819, Ridge moved his family into a two-story log cabin onto this property on the Oostanaula River. In 1828, Ridge and his son John oversaw renovations of the cabin. When the work was finished, the cabin had become a white clapboard plantation home. Here the Ridge family oversaw a ferry, trading post and a working plantation complete with crops, orchards and slaves.

Chieftains Museum/Major Ridge Home is a National Historic Landmark and one of only a few private entities to be certified by the National Park Service as a site on the Trail of Tears. Major Ridge, whose old home Chieftains now occupies, was one of the signers of the Treaty of New Echota, which resulted in the forced relocation of the Cherokee people.

The house has grown significantly since Ridge's departure and important examples of Northwest Georgia architecture can be seen in the various additions to the structure. It is the connection with the Cherokees, however, that gives the site a prominent position in America's history.

Today, the museum presents interpretive exhibits (permanent and temporary), educational programs, and special events that pertain to the Ridge family and Cherokee history and culture. In recent years, the Floyd County Master Gardeners have worked hard to create The Major Ridge Demonstration Garden. The garden features trees, shrubs, and raised beds to demonstrate the types of plants native to our area, those used by Native Americans, and those that were grown on the Ridge farm to provide visitors to the campus with a "living" classroom.

The museum offers schools programs that are directly related to Georgia curriculum requirements at the historic property of Major Ridge and presents a unique opportunity for students to experience a significant part of American history in their own community.

Each field trip includes a house tour, a garden tour, and one activity of the teacher's choice. For the 2017-2018 school year, the museum's program/activity offerings are included on the following pages.
